More than 1 billion people globally are living with high blood pressure

In 2015, there (be) were (0) 1.13 billion people living with high blood pressure worldwide, with the majority of them in low and middle-income countries. The findings which (come) _____ (1) from a new study published last Tuesday in The Lancet also found that the number of people affected by high blood pressure (double, almost) _____ (2) over the past 40 years. In most countries, men were found to have higher blood pressure than women.

The study (highlight) _____ (3) a stark contrast between countries where people are most affected, with high-income countries showing a sharp decline in blood pressure among their populations in recent decades, while low- and middle-income countries have seen numbers spike – particularly in South Asia and Africa.

“When you (look) _____ (4) at this globally, blood pressure is a condition of poverty, not affluence,” said Majit Ezzati, professor of global environmental health at Imperial College London, who (lead) _____ (5) the analysis. “The relationship with national income is completely inverse.” The difference was made more evident by that fact that half of the world's adults with high blood pressure in 2015 (live) _____ (6) in Asia when the research took place.

The United States, Canada and South Korea had the lowest rates in the world, while the UK (have) _____ (7) the lowest proportion of people with raised blood pressure in Europe. “In the high-income world, rates are coming down despite the aging and increasing population,” Ezzati said. “But in the population (in Asia), as the age goes up, the blood pressure (tend) _____ (8) to be higher.” He adds that this is most likely down to differences between these populations in terms of healthy food options but also access to health services providing diagnosis and treatment. According to the WHO, blood pressure (be) _____ (9) estimated to cause 7.5 million deaths globally, almost 13% of all deaths.

“As the leading risk factor for cardiovascular disease, reducing blood pressure is also a key step to meeting the overarching target of reducing non-communicable disease mortality,” said Gretchen Stevens, a statistician with the WHO's Department of Information, Evidence and Research who worked with Ezzati's team. “This new study is the first effort at compiling data to assess whether country trends (progress) _____ (10) in the right direction at the moment to meet the World Health Assembly target,” Stevens said, referring to a goal set in 2011 aimed at reducing the prevalence of high blood pressure by 25% by 2025.

Mount Agung: Where is the active volcano, and what happened last time it erupted?

At the moment, Mount Agung (hurl) _____ (12) clouds of white and dark grey ash about 7,600m (4.7 miles) into the atmosphere and lava is welling up in the crater, though it remains unclear how bad the current situation might get or how long it could last.

Residents are being shepherded to temporary shelters, and signs reading, "You (enter) _____ (14) active volcanic hazard zone" have been erected.

But what does this mean for the island, and the rest of the world? Here's everything you need to know. Mount Agung, the tallest mountain in Bali, is located on the island's western edge. It (be) _____ (15) located 612 miles (984 km) from Indonesia's capital of Jakarta, and 11 miles (18km) from Bali's other volcano, Mount Batur. It destroyed countless villages and (kill) _____ (17) an estimated 1,600 people. Minor eruptions and pyroclastic flows continued on the island for months.

The jury is still out on exactly how big the current eruption (be) _____ (18). Diana Roman, a geologist at the Carnegie Institution of Washington, told The Washington Post that scientists "do not have any basis for knowing whether this eruption (intensify) _____ (19), continue at its current level, or stop". If the eruption is large, it would be a major problem for the island's inhabitants, who depend largely on tourism and agriculture to survive. At the moment, some airlines (allow) _____ (20) customers to change or refund their tickets to the island.

SECTION D: SUBJECT-VERB AGREEMENT [20 MARKS]

From its base in the Dutch capital of Amsterdam, a confectionery company are doing its bit to fight modern-day slavery. Its unconventional weapon of choice? A rich range of chocolate products. "We are a funny company," says Henk Jan Beltman, the chief chocolate officer at Tony's Chocolonely. "The reason that we
5 are a company is not that we want to sell chocolate and not that we want to make money." Instead, Beltman adds, "We wants to make the world a nicer place." Tony's Chocolonely is one of many companies dedicated to producing what are known as Fair Trade chocolate by providing better prices and slave free working conditions to farmers.

10 Each bar is marketed with a promise to the consumer that no slave labour were used in the making of its chocolate. The cocoa sector, worth more than $100 billion per year, have long battled with poor labour practices and forms of exploitation.

A 2015 report from Tulane University and the U.S. Department of Labour
15 found that more than two million children was working in what it defined as "hazardous" conditions in the cocoa industry in Ghana and the Ivory Coast. According to the World Fair Trade Organization, one of the ten guiding principles of the Fair Trade movement are to ensure good working conditions and guarantee no forced labour has been used in the manufacture of any product. Yet Tony's
20 Chocolonely believe the industry can further address this issue and that chocolate no longer needs to be a guilty pleasure.

At its factory in the town of Wieze, Belgium, Barry Callebaut has built a system that isolate Tony's Chocolonely product. Plant director, Xavier De Buysscher, says Tony's Chocolonely beans are treated, roasted and segregated. Its 25 liquid chocolate is stored in a separate tank. Once this process is complete, the product is molded by Belgian chocolate masters, who stamps an ethical message into each bar. The unequal shape of the end product reflects inequality in the world and outlines the West African countries that supplies the beans. This detail is in line with Tony's Chocolonely marketing strategy, to remind the consumer how and why
30 the company began.
